

The United States Official Investigation of baking powder, made under authority of Congress by the Chemical Division of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., recently completed, shows the Royal Baking Powder to be a cream of tarter powder of the highest quality, pure and wholesome, and superior to all others in strength, leavening power, and general usefulness.

A MEMORIAL SERMON

PREACHED AT THE METHODIST CHURCH LAST SUNDAY

To the Members of Custer Post, C. A. R., by Rev. C. L. Logan.

On Sunday last, Custer Post, G. A. R., assembled at the Methodist Church in full uniform, and Rev. C. L. Logan preached a memorial sermon on the text, "This day and these stones shall be unto you for a memorial."

After a reference to the circumstances which occasioned the institution of the memorials of the text, and to other nations which had their cherished reminder of the past, the speaker said:

"We belong to the greatest race of history. I cannot too much emphasize that word 'great' in speaking of the Anglo-Saxon race. It is a race great in its beginnings, great in its achievements, and even greater in its promise for the future. It holds in its hands today the future destiny of the world."

"It has been the mission of this great race to propagate and to illustrate to the world two great ideas, two powerful principles, two elevating and inspiring truths. One of these is Christianity, whose truths were first proclaimed to our savage ancestors upon the shores of Kent. The other is civil and religious liberty, which is the legitimate fruit of the principles and teachings of Christianity."

Let the fact never be obscured that liberty is the direct product of Christianity. We who live in the United States of America are the best and most progressive representatives of the great Anglo-Saxon race. America was born late into the family of nations but she was born with unusual elements of power. Her history is brief in comparison with that of other nations but it is fuller of achievements in behalf of humanity than any and is fraught with inspiration for a yet more exalted purpose.

What are our memorials? Away yonder on our Eastern Coast is Plymouth Rock. Go there and see wrought into chiseled form that leading idea, that great principle which lies at the foundation of our civilization.

"Upon that soil consecrated by the footsteps of the Pilgrims, there rises a colossal statue of Faith. In one hand is grasped an open Bible, while the other, with uplifted finger, points upward to Him who rules in the affairs of men and nations. As we stand in the statue's majestic presence, we recall that oft-pictured scene when a band of men, self exiled for opinion's sake, cast anchor on that rock-bound coast. They came as representatives of the Christian faith. They came to lay the foundations of a new nation upon the soil of the new world—a nation based upon the truths of the revealed Word of God.

"The nation thus begun has grown to marvelous proportions. It has surmounted the difficulties of the past, because it has been true to those ideas. The ideas which have come victorious out of a century of struggle, came to America in the Mayflower, and flourished first on the New England soil."

"Not far from that hallowed, historic rock, with its speaking statue, is another of the nation's memorial stones."

"Upon a hill which overlooks one of the oldest cities of the nation, there stands a granite monument. Why is it there? What fact does it commemorate?"

"It too stands upon consecrated ground. That massive memorial stone rises to commemorate the first great struggle for a larger liberty in the new world. Go stand within the shadow of Bunker Hill monument, and what a rush of historic recollections come! What grand men were those patriots of the Revolution! How great were their toils and sacrifices in behalf of liberty! How lasting our reproach and shame had we failed to preserve those liberties which they through incredible toil and sacrifice transmitted unto us!"

"Plymouth Rock and Bunker Hill! The one speaks to us of the spirit inspired by a deep and abiding faith in God. It points us to the Bible and a Bible Christianity as the only sure foundation upon which a nation can be built. It is the spirit of those who landed upon Plymouth Rock, crystallized in institutions, which has made our nation the greatest and most progressive among the nations of the earth."

"The language of Bunker Hill is liberty; 'Proclaim liberty throughout the land, to all the inhabitants thereof.' It breathes resistance to oppression, defiance to tyranny. It tells what the sons of Plymouth Rock were able to do and dare in behalf of truer and higher civil and religious freedom."

Christianity and liberty; these are the two great ideas, the two great factors in modern civilization, and these principles it has been and still remains the great mission of the Anglo-Saxon race in America to illustrate and to propagate in the world."

"We draw near to a day which for nearly a quarter of a century, has been the Memorial Day of the Republic. It was officially inaugurated in 1868 by Gen. John A. Logan, then Grand Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in these opening words: 'The 30th day of May is designated for the purpose of strewing with flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village and hamlet churchyard in the land.'"

"Concerning the organization he says: 'We are organized comrades, for the purpose, among other things, of preserving and strengthening those kind and fraternal feelings which have bound together the soldiers and sailors who united to suppress this late rebellion. What can aid more to assure this result than cherishing tenderly the memory of our heroic dead, who made their breasts a barricade between their country and their foes. Their soldier lives were the reveille of freedom to a race in chains, and their deaths the tattoo of rebellious tyranny in arms.' In such words of eloquence did one who was himself the chief of the great array of volunteer soldiers of the Rebellion, call the attention of the nation to Memorial Day."

"That day so auspiciously inaugurated has become a day of tender and inspiring memory to the whole people. It is today more observed than ever before. Not only will it be kept up so long as a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of his departed comrades, but also as long as there shall be found in this land the hatred of oppression, or the true love of liberty, as long indeed as the human heart shall be moved by the story of heroic deeds, and shall cherish the memory of gallant sacrifice."

"The near approach of the nation's twenty-third Memorial Day recalls to our thoughts the fearful character of the struggle of more than a quarter of a century ago. Taken all in all the 'War of the Rebellion' was the greatest war of history. There have been longer wars, there have been wars which were from first to last more destructive of human life. But there have been no wars in which the combatants were more evenly matched. There have been none of so desperate fighting, and of so sanguinary results for the number."

Those who fought on either side belonged to the same great race. No braver and more enduring men ever met in shock of battle than those who faced each other on a hundred fields. The losses on either side in many of those conflicts bear fearful witness to the staying qualities of the men engaged, and the destructive characters of the war."

Waterloo is called one of the world's great conflicts, and without doubt it was. But there are a dozen battles of the Rebellion which show a much larger percentage of killed or wounded."

There were companies of men on both sides which lost in a single battle more than 80 per cent of the men engaged. There was a company which took part in Pickett's grand and desperate charge at Gettysburg in which every man was either killed or wounded. What an awful and thrilling story do such facts tell of the deadly character of the struggle."

"The approach of the Nation's Memorial Day especially calls to mind the patriotic self-sacrifice which was a preeminent characteristic of the war. By what power have the ideas of modern civilization been propagated? By the principle which was illustrated in its widest application by the death of Christ upon the cross—the sublime principle of self-sacrifice. Upon the cross of Calvary the climactic Man of all the centuries who was also the Son of God, gave his life for the salvation and moral uplifting of the race."

"Through the power of that transcendent example has mankind been moving upwards. Man has labored and toiled and sacrificed and we have entered into their labors."

"How much we owe to this greatest principle of self-sacrifice. Even the right to gather here this morning in quietness and peace for Christian worship has not been bought without the price of sacrifice. Men have been persecuted and have shed their blood to secure liberty of conscience, and 'freedom to worship God.'"

"Our American Republic, this greatest experiment of self-government, was born of the power of this principle. Upon the field of Lexington and Bunker Hill, of Bennington and Monmouth, of Princeton and Germantown, of Saratoga and Yorktown were fought the battles of a higher and truer freedom. The blood of the best and bravest of the sons of revolution moistened the soil which henceforth became hallowed ground."

"By untold self-sacrifice have those liberties there won, been preserved and transmitted unto us. There came a time when the very life of the Nation was at stake. Many of us recall the thrill of patriotic indignation that swept like wild fire through the land when our Nation's flag was assailed. Then was witnessed a grand uprising in behalf of the stars and stripes. The best and bravest went forth to fight the battles of freedom and union—the freedom of the slave and the union of States. They stood shoulder to shoulder in the awful storm of Fredricksburg and Chancellorsville, of Antietam and Chickamauga, of Seven Oaks and the Wilderness. They bore the stars and stripes to victory at Shiloh and Gettysburg, at Vicksburg and Lookout Mountain, at Atlanta and Missionary Ridge. By thousands and tens of thousands they laid down their lives that the Nation which they loved might live."

"Our Nation's heroes and martyrs! How great their number, how noble their deeds. They have become a part of the Nation's proud-est and most imperishable history."

"Our Nation's heroes! They created anew an heroic age. Tell not of the heroic ages of the past. America has her latest and greatest heroic age. It is found in the conspicuous valor, and the gallant deeds which were wrought upon the many battlefields of the Rebellion, to secure a larger liberty and to perpetuate the National life."

"Our Nation's martyrs! The grand army of the noble dead! How precious the sacrifice which they made. What a halo of glory surrounds their memory. More than a quarter of a century has passed since they poured forth the rich offering of their blood in accepted libation upon the altar of their country. Yet is that sacrifice not forgotten? It is continually recalled. It has become a sacred inspiration. Monuments dedicated to their memory arise in almost every city, village and hamlet, churchyard in the land. Their spirits seem to hover as a 'cloud of witnesses' above the Nation, and have power to inspire the people with nobler motives and more heroic patriotism."

"A truly great man cannot die. He is not a meteor tracing a track through the heavens, and arresting the gaze of man only to be suddenly extinguished. He is a spark of fervent heat, sent forth by order of the Infinite with power to kindle a flame in the hearts of men that shall burn through the ages."

"Plato died, but the human mind has marched on to the conquest of continually higher realms of truth. William of Orange fell before the hand of assassination, inspired by that genius of tyranny and crime, Philip II of Spain. But the cause of human liberty did not perish. It rather gathered strength and power. It lived to bear fruitage first in the United Netherlands and then in the great American Republic."

Thus shall we continue to lead the nation onward to the goal of earthly progress and to the full establishment of the kingdom of Him who is 'Lord of Lords and King of Kings.'"
